Rules for Marketing—How to Choose Cheap and Good Food.

Beef—The second quality of beef has rather whitish fat, laid moderately thick upon the back and about the kidneys; the flesh is close grained, having but few streaks of fat running through it, and is of a pale red color, and covered with a rough, yellowish skin. Poor beef is dark red, gristly and tough to the touch, with a scanty layer of soft, oily fat. Buy meat as cheap as you can, but be sure it is fresh; slow and long cooking will make tough meat tender, but tainted meat is only fit to throw away. Never use it. You would by doing so invite diverge to enter the home, where smiling invite disease to enter the home where smiling health should reign. The best way to detect taint in any kind of meat is to run a sharp, thin knife blade close to the bone, and then smell it to see if the oder is sweet. Wipe the knife after you use it. Men's Buckl coarser. The poorest lamb has yellow fat and lean, flabby red meat, which keeps but a short time. Test the freshness of lamb by touching the kidney fat; if it is soft and moist the meat is on the verge of spoiling; a bad smell indicates that it is already tainted; it is utterly unfit for use.

Veal.—The flesh of the second quality of veal is red in contrast with the pinkish white color of the prime sort, and the fat is whiter coarser.

of the prime sort, and the fat is whiter, coarser grained and less abundant. The poorest kind Philadelphia Record. has decidedly red flesh and very little kidney fat. The neck is the first part that taints, and it can easily be tested: the loin is just spoiling when the kidney fat begins to grow soft and

Read this sentence about bob veal carefully, and be sure to remember it. It is the flesh of calves killed when two or three weeks old, or that of "deaconed calves," which are killed almost as soon as they are born for the value of their skins. This practice cannot be too harshly condemned as a criminal waste of food; for a stock raiser or farmer who knows his business can feed his calves until they reach a healthy maturity without seriously interfering with his supply of milk. The flesh of bob yeal is a soft, flabby, sticky substance, of a ropy, gelatinous nature; and, being the first flesh unchanged by the health giving action of air and food, it is devoid of the elements necessary to transform it into wholesome food. It should never be Pork.—The second quality of pork has rather hard, red flesh and yellowish fat. The poorest kind has dark, coarse grained meat, soft fat est kind has dark, coarse grained meat, soft fat and discolored kidneys. The flesh of stale pork is moist and clammy, and its smell betrays its condition. Measly pork has little kernels in the fat, and is unhealthy and dangerous food. After testing, as you would beef, so as to see if it is fresh, and making sure that it is not measly, we have still to dread the presence of trichina, a dangerous parasite present in the flash of some hags. The surest prevention of flesh of some hogs. The surest prevention of danger from this cause is thorough cooking, which destroys any germs that may exist in the meat. Cook your pork until it is crisp and brown, by a good, steady, fire, or in boiling water, at least twenty minutes to each pound. Pork eaten in cold weather, or moderately in summer, alternately with other meats, is a palatable and nutritious food. It has a hard fibre, and needs to be thoroughly chewed in order to be perfectly digested; for that reason it should be sparingly used by the young and the very old. The least fat is found in the leg, which contains an excess of flesh forming elements, and resembles lean beef in composition; the most fat is in the face and belly. When cured as bacon it readily takes on the anti septic action of salt and smoke, and becomes a valuable adjunct to vegetable food, as well as a pleasant relich; and in this share is one of the most in the share is one of the share in the share is one of the share is one of the share in the share is one of the relish; and in this shape is one of the most im-portant articles in general use.

Poultry.—As a little feast is only a reason able anticipation for Christmas, some rules for buying the different sorts, and a few simple re-ceipts for cooking them palatably, will not come

Fresh poultry may be known by its full, bright eyes, pliable feet, and soft, moist skin; the best is plump, fat, and nearly white, and the grain of the flesh is fine. The feet and neck of a young fowl are large in proportion to its size, and the tip of the breast bone is soft and easily bent between the fingers; a young cock has soft, loose spurs, and a long, full, bright red comb. Old fowls have long, thin necks and feet, and the flesh on the legs and back has a purplish shade. Chickens and fowls back has a purplish shade. Chickens and fowls are always in season.

Turkeys when good are white and plump, have full breasts and smooth legs, generally black, with soft loose spurs; hen turkeys are smaller, fatter and plumper, but of inferior flavor; full grown turkeys are the best for boiling, as they do not tear in dressing; old turkeys have long hairs, and the flesh is purplish where it shows under the skin on the legs and it shows under the skin on the legs and back. About March they deteriorate in quality.
Young ducks and geese are plump, with light, semi-transparent fat, soft breastbone, ten-der flesh, leg joints which will break by the weight of the bird, fresh colored and brittle beaks, and windpipes that break when pressed between the thumb and forefinger. They are best in fall and winter. Young pigeons have light red flesh upon the breast, and full, fresh colored legs; when the legs are thin, and the breast is very dark, the birds are old. The giblets of poultry consist of the head, neck, wings, feet, gizzard, heart and liver, and make good soups, fricassees and pies. Fish.—Although fish contains more water and less solid nutriment than meat, it is generally useful from its abundance and cheapness; and certain kinds which are called redblooded, such as salmon and sturgeon, are water varieties. Sea fish, and those which live in both salt of some fresh water species can be overcome Sweet oranges at and fresh water, such at salmon, shad and by soaking them in cold water and salt for two hours or more before cooking; all kinds are lest just before spawning, the flesh becoming poor and watery after that period. Fresh fish have firm flesh, rigid fins, bright clear eyes and ruddy gills.

Oysters, clams, scallops and mussels should be eaten every fresh, as they soon lose their flavor after being removed from the shell.

lavor after being removed from the shell.

Lobsters and crabs should be chosen by their brightness of color, lively movement and great weight in perpertion to their size; you ought always to buy them alive, and put them head-first into a large pot of boiling water, containing a handful of salt; they will cook in about twenty minutes.

Vegetables.—In order to be healthy we must eat some fresh vegetables; they are cheap and nourishing, especially onions and cabbages. Pease, beans, and lentils, all of which are among the lowest priced of foods are invaluable in the diet of a laboring man; he can get so much nourishment out of them that he hardly needs meat; and if they are cooked in the water which has been used for boiling ed in the water which has been used for boiling meat, they make the healthiest kind of a meal.

All juicy vegetables should be very fresh and crisp; and if a little wilted, can be restored by being sprinkled with water and laid in a cool dark place; all roots and tubers should be pared and laid in cold water an hour or more before using. Green vegetables are best just before using. Green vegetables are best just before they flower; and roots and tubers are prime from their ripening until they begin to ful about a piece of meat, the butcher refuses to let you apply this test carefully enough to avoid injuring the meat, you will be safe in thinking he is afraid of the result.

Mutton.—The flesh of the second quality of mutton is dark red and close grained, with very few threads of fat running through it; the fat is rather soft and is laid thin on the back and kidneys, closely adhering to them. The poorest healthy quality has very pale flesh and thin white fat, and the meat parts easily from the safe and thin the poorest healthy quality has very pale flesh and thin bone. and save enough to do it.
Fruit.—Fresh fruit is a very important food. especially for children as it keeps the blood pure and the bowels regular. Next to grains pure and the bowels regular. Next to grains and seeds, it contains the greatest amount of nutriment to a given quantity. Apples are more wholesome than any other fruit, and plentful and cheap two-thirds of the time; they nourish, cool and strengthen the body. In Europe laborers depend largely upon them for nourisment and if they have plenty, they can do well without meat. They miss apples much more than potetoes for they are much more substantial potatoes, for they are much more substantial
